Passenger-only ferry rates will stay the same

Good news if you take the passenger-only ferry between Vashon Island and downtown Seattle...

Despite rising fuel costs, the King County Ferry District has decided passenger-only ferry rates won't increase.

"It is no change over the current operations and current rates that passengers are used to paying," said board member Kristine Lund. She says it's important to maintain a reasonable rate while control of the service transitions to the ferry district.

The district assumed the costs of the passenger-only service after state funding on the route was discontinued.
